

Reading Bodies: Narrating Illness in Spanish and European Literatures and Cultures (1870s to 1960s and Beyond)

A One-Day Workshop

23 May 2024

Digital Humanities Seminar Room B.01, Queen's Building, University of Exeter

The interconnections between literature and medicine have been the focus of increasing scholarly interest. Building on recent studies in this field of Modern Languages (Fernández-Medina, 2018; Murphy, 2017; Wong, 2024) and transnational Medical Humanities (Craig and Linge, 2017; Elsner and Wilson, 2022; Novillo-Corvalán, 2015), the workshop will analyse cultural narratives of illness in Europe in the late-nineteenth and early-twentieth century. Drawing together specialists across language disciplines (foregrounding Hispanic Studies alongside French, German, Italian and Portuguese), the project traces the development of narratives of ill-health from the 1870s to the 1960s and beyond, with particular attention to gendered representations of psychological and physical conditions. The project explores the importance of language and cultural representation for the dissemination and legitimisation of ideas about health and illness, and encourages discussion about the afterlives and ongoing echoes of cultural narratives about the body up to the present day. Seeking to develop interdisciplinary perspectives, this is the second of two research workshops on the project theme.

This project is generously funded by an AHRC Research, Development & Engagement Fellowship [AH/X01133X/1]: Reading Bodies \(exeter.ac.uk\)
